Hopi Indian Traditions.

The Hopi Indians of Arizona have no written literature, but an almost boundless store of oral traditions, which are handed down unaltered to each generation in turn and which form the guiding principle of their religious belief and of their whole life, says the Craftsman. Every clan, and there are a number of family clans making up the various Hopi towns, has its own kiva, or underground ceremonial chamber, entered by a ladder through a square opening in the roof, which is but a foot or two above the general level of the ground. Here the education of the boys is carried on, beginning at the age of seven or eight years. They are instructed day by day in the literature, history and myths of the tribes, the priests being the teachers. Without writing and without books the Hopi have an extensive literature, and that the utmost accuracy is observed in its oral transmission from generation to generation is revealed by certain comparisons with the records made by the Spanish explorers in the sixteenth century.

Long Sieges in Congress.

Samuel J. Randall of Pennsylvania was an avowed protectionist Democrat and a man who, his colleagues had learned, usually was able to get his way. Randall had first entered congress in 1892. He was a quiet, persistent, hardworking person who attracted little attention for several years. Then the Republicans, sure of their majority and wishing to expedite business, undertook to adopt rules which would prevent obstruction. The quiet Mr. Randall set himself against the attempt. He led the small Democratic majority with a skill so unusual that more than once he blocked the Republicans' way until it was too late to pass the measure. His endurance seemed unlimited. From one session lasting forty-six hours and twenty-five minutes, where Randall had forced the roll to be called seventy-five times, he came out as fresh as he went in. At another time in the fight over the force bill he was on the floor for seventy-two consecutive hours.—Ida M. Tarbell in American Magazine.

How Pigeons Catch Quail.

The Pigeons have a unique way of getting quail. For them there is no closed season or, indeed, any game law whatever. Seasons when the quail come down from the mountains to the spring the Indians make great preparation for their capture. They build a long house with a long slender opening in the front formed of tall straight sticks set closely together. Within the house an Indian sits concealed, holding a long limber rod, which he operates dexterously through the narrow opening. In the early morning when the birds flock down for water he picks them off one at a time, killing them instantly. There is no report in this manner of hunting to frighten the others away, and the Indians often get enough game in a single morning for the whole settlement.—Los Angeles Times.

Went to Bed For Dinner.

An amusing incident is told of the absentmindedness of the late Justice William G. Kneeg of Ireland. It was at a dinner at his own house, and he had excused himself from the guests, who had already assembled to go up stairs to dress. Time went by, but he did not reappear. The company sat patiently for some time till at length, when their appetites were getting the better of their manners and they were about to send a messenger in quest of their absent host, he appeared and explained with many apologies that imagining that he was retiring for the night he had undressed and got into bed. After an hour's sleep he awoke, and it suddenly dawned on him that his guests were waiting to dine with him below.

This is to certify all whom it may Concern that Jonathan Morrill hath paid Sufficient Beverage for a Suit of Clothes a Coat of light Coloured Drab Cloth with Pinkish Satine lining, mohair Buttons a full Coat and Breeches of Drab and a Jacket of light Coloured blue Shaw Velvet with Tick lining and green mohair and flannel (changed) Brass Buttons as witnesses our hands. A Hero.

A boutful of ladies and officers going to a picnic was swamped in crossing an East Indian river. A lady and an officer clung to an oar. "It is not enough for two," said the man. "Say goodbye for me to the regiment." Then he left his hold of the oar and of life. It is easy to see that a romance might be founded on this, but these are the plain facts.

The Scope of Indigestion.

Indigestion is not only the most prevalent of all diseases, but is the most far reaching in its complications, says Dr. Latson in Health Culture. In recognition of this fact a brilliant medical man has said:

"There is but one disease—indigestion."

Cayenne Pepper.

In cayenne pepper we have a pure, energetic, permanent stimulant. Why not use it instead of whiskey and brandy, which are not more energetic and are not permanent in their actions? says Therapeutics and Dietetics.
